

8 Epic Solo Trips for Every Type of Traveler

Perri O. Blumberg • Feb 14, 2017

There's nothing that says confidence more than solo travel. Whether you want to follow every whim without compromising or your friends just don't have the funds, traveling alone can be fulfilling no matter your main objective: adventure, relaxation or reflection. These eight killer getaways for every kind of traveler (sun-junkie, yoga enthusiast, adrenaline addict and more) should get your wheels turning with some serious bucket list inspo. So start packing your favorite books (ain't nobody gonna be around to judge you for re-reading The Carrie Diaries), and consider your selfie stick your temporary BFF.

6. Bozeman, Montana: Adventure (AKA Montana) is calling. It may be off-the-beaten path, but this jewel in Big Sky Country is well-worth adding to your radar if you're looking for a stag-cation to clear your mind or experience something new. First, dabble in fat-tire biking with insane western Rocky Mountain views or ski at famed Bridger Bowl to work up an appetite for all the bistros and breweries waiting for you back at ground level. At The Lark Bozeman, bask in the winter wonderland glory for a unique "snowga" experience (every ounce of Instagram gold you'd expect) as warmup for a trail hike or, you know, sitting by a wood-burning fireplace sipping spiked cider. (Photo via The Lark Bozeman)